1 INTRODUCTION

These are the first years from which we have Bob Dylan recordings. The first recording from 1958 is no more than two school kids playing around with a tape recorder, but interesting nevertheless. The second recording is questionable and reveals a singer with a voice very much unlike the one we hear just a couple of months later. 1960 was spent mostly in St Paul, rehearsing, as it were, for Greenwich Village.

2 CALENDAR

- 1958 Robert Zimmerman and John Bucklen make a number of home tapes where they talk and sing. Fragment of one of these tapes were included in the BBC documentary about Highway 61.
- January Dylan starts to perform at the Purple Onion Pizza Parlour in St Paul, Minnesota.
- February Dylan performs regularly with "Spider" John Koerner at the Ten O'Clock Scholar, singing songs like They Called The Wind Maria.
- May A recording is made in Karen Wallace's apartment in St Paul. The tape contains 27 songs and shows a singer with a country voice a la Hank Williams rather than the later nasal Woody Guthrie impersonation. There are however different opinions about the genuineness of this tape. Michael Krogsgaard omits it in his "Master of the Tracks". Clinton Heylin and Glen Dundas accept it as a Dylan recording.
- May Dylan appears regularly on the Purple Onion and The Bastille in St Paul, singing songs like Go Down You Murderers, Sinner Man, House Of The Risin' Sun and Man Of Constant Sorrow. His first compositions are written including One Eyed Jacks and Greyhound Blues.
- Summer Dylan plays piano in a strip-joint called "The Gilded Garter" in Central City, Colorado. He hangs out at the Denver coffee house "The Exodus", where he first meets Jesse Fuller.
- Early September Dylan reads "Bound For Glory" by Woody Guthrie.
- September First undisputed and circulating Dylan performance, besides the 1958 home taping, is taped in Dylan's apartment on 15th Avenue South in Minneapolis, a place he shared with High Brown. The Guthrie influence is already very notable.
- Fall Dylan continues to perform at The Purple Onion and The Bastille in St Paul.
- December Dylan leaves St Paul and Minneapolis and goes to Chicago, playing in coffee houses and at student parties. He is now performing almost only Woody Guthrie songs.

3 RECORDINGS

- 1958 Bob Dylan's Home in Hibbing Minnesota
- May The apartment of Karen Wallace, St Paul Minnesota. "The St Paul tape"
- September Most probably Dylan's apartment on 15th Avenue South, Minneapolis.
